ABSTRACT

Simulated Patient encounters are widely used in order to provide students with the opportunity to harness their synthesis, analysis, and decision making skills without regard to time of day or physical location and without risk to both patient and student. Orthodontists nowadays are having a hard time acquiring the required number of patients to be diagnosed and treated inside the clinic. Orthodontics Web-Based Interactive Simulation Environment (Ortho-WISE) is an online application, written in PHP connected to a MySQL database that allows Orthodontist professors to author cases optimized for dental education and allows students to "meet" the simulated patients and diagnose and plan treatment for them. Students are able to learn more through metacognition by comparing their work to that of the case authors' and by receiving feedback. Ortho-WISE also includes a forum that could facilitate discussion for students and professors about the simulated cases and diagnoses and treatment plans for them.

CHAPTER 1

INTRODUCTION

A. Background of the Study

The University of the Philippines Manila has a host of programs available for graduate students wanting to continue learning in the academe. One of the colleges supporting this is the College of Dentistry. The Graduate Program of the College of Dentistry offers two types of degrees, both in the area of Orthodontics. These are the Certificate of Proficiency in Orthodontics and the Master of Science in Dentistry (Orthodontics). [1]

These degrees follow the same curriculum format. During the first part of the program, an intensive course that introduces the students to orthodontic biomechanics, diagnosis and treatment planning takes place. Clinical instruction, the second part of the program, uses the attending faculty-resident model. Each patient is assigned to a specific resident who is responsible for the patient under the guidance of his instructor. Each resident performs during his two year training, active treatment on approximately 50 patients (20 original and 30 transfer cases). The main clinical therapy used is the Standard Edgewise Technique. Other methods that may also be applied in limited clinical cases include the Straight Wire Technique and various types of Functional Appliances. [2]

The above-mentioned educational system employed by the Graduate Program in Orthodontics is a form of traditional teaching. Modern teaching techniques are actually implemented in numerous dentistry schools today. An example of this modern teaching scheme is the use of the virtual patient case simulation environment.

WordNet defines simulation as "assuming an appearance which is feigned, or not true," and a simulator as, "a machine that simulates an environment for the purpose of training or research." [3] In a simulation environment, there is no real patient present while the trainees learn components of the skill they are building. Simulation allows students to gain knowledge while repetitively doing something. Students trained through simulation takes to real patient environment experience, skills and knowledge not present before the simulation training. Combining these new found skills and knowledge by the students with their instructors' can be thought of as part of simulation training as well.

Simulated patients are actors who play the role of patients or actual patients coached to present specific illnesses to the dental practitioner. Their purpose is to help instructors teach and evaluate patient assessment and interviewing skills. [4]

B. Statement of the Problem

High quality learning is the goal of modern healthcare education. This includes the preparation and skill enhancement in terms of medical problem solving and professional thinking. Traditional teaching entails letting the student meet real patients. While it is true that this contributes to the professional development of the student, there are a number of problems to this teaching method.

During the clinical training students should preferably meet as many patients as possible with important and typical illnesses. However, the students usually do not see a complete scenario from the beginning of the diagnostic process to the end of the healing process. Most often they do not even see more than a part of the diagnostic process. [5] Sometimes, patients do not come back for follow up due to inevitable circumstances.

The ongoing change of treating more and more patients outside the university clinics diminishes the number of educational cases. The lack of willing patients further limits this number. This also causes a decrease in the opportunity for the students to practice integrating knowledge.

Furthermore, real patient environments are limited in availability in terms of time of day or physical location. Risks involved in meeting real patients are also high since mistakes are not allowed therein.

D. Significance of the Study

This application generates an interactive system that would be beneficial for students and instructors. The virtual patient case simulation environment allow for repetitive and deliberate practice of clinical skills by the students without regard to time of day or physical location. The environment provides practice in a safe environment with no risk to patient or student. Mistakes are allowed. Another benefit of the simulated environment is the ability to allow every student the opportunity to "meet" any patients they may encounter in their practice by providing cases optimized for dental education.

It will also help achieve high quality education because it will help the students test their existing knowledge and identify gaps in their knowledge by discussing cases, look up texts and references while working at the computer and access online resources. It will promote higher level aspects of the thinking process (e.g. synthesis, analysis, decision making) by requiring the students to generate their own path through the investigation, interpret findings, generate diagnoses, and explain decisions. That is, to practice reasoning but in a less stressful approach than with a real patient. And it will support metacognition by providing computer-based feedback on performance. Students evaluate their performance against an expert, the case author, by comparing the expert's reasoning to their own (a way of monitoring their own thinking). Feedback is a critical factor in learning. [6]

Furthermore, virtual learning environments augments the number patients needed for training. New patient cases will always be made ready and these patients will never be lost to follow up.

E. Scope and Limitations

1. The simulation covers the performing initial checkup, interview taking, executing initial laboratory tests such as taking radiographic images, and studying the dental cast of the patient.

2. The study does not include simulation of the implementation of the treatment plan such as wire installation, bracket placement, and the like.

3. The case authoring process used by all instructors is accomplished using a single template.

4. The diagnosis and therapy proposal of each student will not be saved in the database. Students' collective diagnoses and treatment plans are logged for debriefing sessions. Individual students can compare their own case discussions to the recommendations of the case authors.

5. A simulated patient case can only be authored as well as managed by a single instructor. An instructor can only edit his own set of simulated patients.

6. Determination of the veracity of the correct diagnosis and treatment plan of a patient case is outside of the system.

7. The compilation of 2D dental cast images is the only model transformed into 3D. The resulting 3D rendering is limited by the number of available 2D image data. The perspectives are limited to the following: front, left, right, maxillary, and mandibular.

8. The virtual patient environment is not fully equivalent to real case traditional teaching approach.

F. Assumptions

1. All staff, students, and instructors are assumed to have access to internet/computers to be able to access the system.

2. Mechanics for the creation of account is outside of the system. The list of students enrolled in the particular semester of an academic year is given to the system administrator by the faculty in charge for the creation of accounts. At the end of the semester, student accounts are deactivated by the system administrator.

3. It is assumed that the diagnosis, treatment plan, and recommendation of the instructors are authoritative and final. The International standard for Orthodontic therapeutics for every individual Orthodontist and patient will be enforced.

4. It is assumed that the study will be implemented as part of the Graduate Program in Orthodontics curriculum so that students as well as instructors are both involved interactively in the system.

REVIEW OF RELATED LITERATURE

Pedagogic approaches have evolved from traditional classroom learning to collaborative online learning in the recent years. Indeed, technology advances have influenced the revamp of the educational system. With the rise of the World Wide Web, opportunities for teaching bloomed. Furthermore, the World Wide Web has become more and more important as an effective medium to grant access to different learning systems.

The World Wide Web is beneficial because, from the user end, web-based applications can be accessed anytime, anywhere worldwide from any platform. Web-based platforms are scalable. That is, they can execute many user requests at the same time. Also, the application programs are installed on the server machine, so that users are spared the inconvenience associated with maintenance/upgrade of the learning software.

From the developer end, advantages include the fact that web-based platforms are extensible and scalable. Different software and hardware components may be easily connected to the central server via the Internet. Moreover, web-based platforms provide an open environment for efficient collaboration among users, a significant advantage over the traditional software development paradigms. [6]

Collaboration among users is stressed to be an important teaching method that supports the learner's shared knowledge building within collaborating groups of learners as well as the individual construction of knowledge. In this connection, the design of virtual learning environments and the implied roles of teachers and students are considered key factors of the collaborative learning process.

The emerging design convention today is utilizing the web-based benefits listed above. Students collaborating in this web-based learning are allowed to communicate independently of time and place with teachers, tutors, fellow students, and administration. Teaching and collaboration are based on web-based communication ensuring that online students do not feel isolated. [7]

The use of simulation technology is a form of collaborative online teaching. In Orthodontics, this manner of instruction can be included in the student's pre-clinical training. Following this idea, Dr. Henderson proposes the Virtual Practicum in his paper, "Comprehensive, Technology-Based Clinical Education: The Virtual Practicum". According to him, the Virtual Practicum provides a virtual world that is sufficiently immersive and intrinsically enjoyable to allow even busy professionals to ignore, for a time, the pressures and distractions of the real world.

The Virtual Practicum, Henderson asserts, may reduce the risks to real patients as students develop and apply new knowledge and skills, since these are done in a technology-generated environment before applying them in the real world. It is a collective world in its own right, providing an inviting, strong sense of place that one can visit repeatedly to learn. It contains language, materials, and tools most of which have analogs in the real world of practice, some of which borrow from the esthetics of best-practices in computer game design. A key feature is use of narrative and case-based reasoning to increase engagement, enhance reflection, and improve learning. It embodies particular ways of seeing, thinking, and doing via cycles of experience, reflection, abstraction, and experimentation.

Narrative used in the case presentations provides an underlying structure and context for discussions and reflection that assert themselves with increasing authority and intensity. Activities include clinically realistic patient encounters, documentary-style interviews with real patients and practitioners, and computer-generated exercises that allow for heuristic learning of facts and rules. All this is done under the guidance of senior practitioner, in the best case a master teacher and master clinician, who may teach in a conventional sense, "communicating information, advocating theories, describing practice examples" via mini-lectures and case discussions and function as a coach, demonstrating, advising, questioning, and criticizing via case discussions and guided reflection and experimentation with feedback. [8]

The object of study of these virtual learning environments is the patient. Issenberg, et al reported in a journal that the problem in medical education is that the subjects necessary to "deliberately practice on" are human beings with all their diversity and variability. Changes in medical practice that have reduced physician teaching time and decreased the availability of patients as educational resources and the rapidly increasing options for disease diagnosis and management have created a need for new methods of instruction, knowledge acquisition and assessment. Advances in high-fidelity simulations of human conditions constitute such new methods and could add immeasurably to our teaching armamentarium.

Furthermore, the paper stressed that unlike patients, simulators do not become embarrassed or stressed; have predictable behavior; are available anytime to fit curriculum needs; can be programmed to simulate selected findings, conditions, situations, and complications; allow standardized experience for all trainees; can be used repeatedly with fidelity and reproducibility; and can be used to train both for procedures and difficult management situations. [9]

Administration of simulated patients should be a serious concern for developers of the environment. Orthodontic Patient Administration System (OPAS) suggests a comprehensive way to handle the matter. OPAS is a Windows-based computer program designed to provide a complete management system for an orthodontic department. The system is designed on a 'Click box' basis, so that support staff can input the data from simple data sheets completed in the surgery. It includes a database with full search capacity, and is able to compile, sort, and display waiting lists and case mix logbooks. There is a full edit facility for research purposes, an ability to export and import information and perform checks to ensure the data is coherent. The program itself is compact and will run quickly on a modest 486 MHz machine with only 8Mb of RAM. OPAS is fully networkable. Because it is compiled, it is a fast system even on a large network. [10]

The user-friendly input system of OPAS will be favorable for non-technology savvy case authors. The employment of waiting lists that can be compiled, sorted, and displayed is a wise decision in light of the fact that student users choose one simulated patient case at a time. The compactness, networkability, and robustness imply that it can be integrated to the any learning environment.

Now that patient administration concern is settled, focus should be shifted to how the students interact with the simulated patients. Dickerson and Johnson have published a journal article that evaluates script-based approach for patient-doctor interaction simulation. They point out that taking the patient's medical—or dental—history in an interview is a constrained problem. That is, the conversation flow is predictable with a relatively limited set of dialogue options. A relevant observation that was discussed in the paper said that student performance in basic standardized patient scenarios is easy to measure and evaluate. From a set of pre-formed questions, a student's passing of a scenario is based on the number of "core questions" that the student asked the standardized patient. These core questions are required to lead to a correct differential diagnosis. This "question checklist" metric is simple to implement, and thus performance evaluation is similar to that of the actual standardized patients. [11]

Student users can interact effortlessly with the simulated patients through a pre-formed question and answer interview. Choosing the correct questions will allow them to arrive at a correct differential diagnosis. Instructors are the ones responsible for laying down the structure of the ideal interview format.

The process of patient interview described above will allow students to arrive at a differential diagnosis of the patient. Diagnosis of the problem should further lead to proposal of the treatment plan. Treatment planning with respect to the field of Orthodontics follows a definitive framework. An example of this framework is discussed by Rodrigues, et al in a published journal article. In the paper, they examine a proposed a computer-based orthodontic simulation system.

The system discussed by Rodrigues is written in Java and consists of 3 basic modules namely Cephalometric Analysis, 3D Mesh Generator of dental arch and appliance models, and the Orthodontic Treatment Simulator. In particular, the Cephalometric Analysis module is responsible for the X-Ray segmentations and the calculation of the ideal teeth position in dental arch based on the mouth measurements of a patient. Together with the actual dental cast, these measurements are used to build the volumetric modeling of the dental arch and appliance model in the 3D Mesh Generator module. The Teeth Movement Simulator and Morphing Tool are components of the Orthodontic Treatment Simulation module. They allow the clinician to simulate and visualize the temporal evolution of the treatment. Presently, the former is under development and the latter has already been completed. [12]

Radiographic, extra-oral, and intra-oral images of the patient are crucial analysis factors when formulating the treatment plan of the patient. Furthermore, dental casts viewed in 3D allow for greater leverage in studying dental features of the patient.

As mentioned above, viewing dental casts in 3D is advantageous for students who need to analyze them. Hajeer, et al enumerated the applications of 3D imaging in Orthodontics in a journal article they published. Their study indicates that 3D images are a reliable way to archive study models, producing durable images without any fear of loss or damage to the original casts. Documentation of treatment progress and communication between professional colleagues is made easier by examining records in 3D. Tele-orthodontics saves time and effort in treatment planning, since the need for a physical meeting is no longer required. With new advances in 3D dental and orthodontic software, the orthodontist can examine intra- and inter-arch relationships with much more precision. Transverse relationships between upper and lower arches could be better evaluated when 3D models are viewed in occlusion from different angles on the screen.

The ultimate dream of 3D imaging and modeling is to achieve the 'virtual orthodontic patient', where we can see the bone, flesh and teeth in three dimensions. If this can be achieved in an accurate way, it will allow considerable data to be collected and a variety of soft and hard tissue analyses to be performed. Our knowledge of the masticatory system will increase, and our understanding of tooth movement biomechanics, orthopedic and orthognathic corrections will be enhanced. [13]

Given the methodologies for presenting the patient case, for providing interaction for the patient and student, and for viewing dental casts, it is now important to note the user functionalities that comprise the system. Zary, et al described the development, implementation and pilot evaluation of a Web-based Virtual Patient Case Simulation environment called Web-SP.

Student users are in focus first. A typical path through a patient case in Web-SP starts with logging in into the system, and selecting what case to use. After selecting the appropriate case, the case is briefly presented, followed by a possibility to interview, examine and/or order tests on the patient. In the patient interview section, any illness history question might be asked by selecting a question from an extensive database of history questions divided into main- and sub-categories. The choice for a pre-formed question bank design was decided as a first step to ensure an easy authoring of the cases by the teachers. Answers to the questions asked are stored in the "asked questions area" to avoid repeatedly requesting the same information again. Answers are given using still images with text or with video sequences.

For physical exams, the student user chooses an examination method such as inspection, auscultation, palpation, percussion, etc and then by clicking on the appropriate body part. The results are presented as a combination of text, image, sound and/or video. Laboratory and imaging tests are ordered from an extensive set of lab tests. Lab test results are stored in the "ordered labs" to avoid repeatedly requesting a lab if results are forgotten. Lab results can be displayed as text, images and/or video.

When finished examining a case, the student/learner is expected to enter a diagnosis, differentials and motivations based on the facts and reflective activities performed. After entering a diagnosis, the therapy screen becomes available. A therapy proposal is required before having access to the feedback. Feedback is case specific.

The feedback area gives the student the possibility to compare his/her answers with the teacher/case creators view on diagnosis and therapy. Feedback on the patient interview, physical examinations and lab tests is individualized for each student. The Web-SP system matches the actions undertaken by the student with the actions recommended by the case authors. Feedback on the diagnosis and therapy is not individualized. In those sections, the student will have to compare his/her answers with what the case author has proposed as the recommended correct answer. A chronological activity log of all steps undertaken while solving the patient cases is also provided for on-screen reviewing, or in a printable version for further discussion during a de-briefing session.

For the instructor users, Web-SP is designed in such a way that it enables them to create patient cases using a simple web-based interactive authoring interface. The case authoring environment is built-in into the student view to enable the case author a real time preview of the case. Switching between the authoring mode and the student view is simply done by clicking on an "edit on" button. The main focus of Web-SP is to provide a user friendly method of authoring cases with low requirement on the user's technical knowledge. Using the Webs' technical capabilities such as text, images and different components of multimedia, teachers can compose patient cases that are interesting as well as cognitively challenging. The authoring environment enables the case author to edit text and upload media, but also add or hide unwanted medical history questions or lab tests.

History questions, physical examinations and lab tests that are considered important to solve a specific case can easily be marked "required", resulting in that these will automatically be followed up under the feedback section.

Patient cases that require students to seek information, analyze data, pose questions, perform physical examinations, order lab tests, present a diagnosis and therapy can all be developed easily using the built-in template cases or by editing existing cases. The templates are different cases reflecting normal findings (healthy patients) that are available to all case authors to speed up the authoring process. It includes an extensive set of history questions and answers. Physical exam data and more than a thousand different lab results (including imaging and endoscopic methods) are also available. Template cases are available for female and male patient cases of different age categories.

Cases are created in an easy stepwise process. Time needed to create a single case varies depending on the complexity of the case and the need of new clinical media. [6]

As the student users present diagnoses of patient cases, it is also important to note that diagnostic proficiency of student users should be properly evaluated. Many scoring techniques exist today but a suitable approach is discussed in the paper by Littlefield, et al. They used the technique proposed by Horacio Rimoldi in their proposed system, SimEndo I, a multimedia patient simulation program that could be used for teaching or assessing endodontic diagnosis.

In a series of reports over a thirty-eight-year period, Rimoldi developed and validated a patient simulation scoring technique based on the content and sequence of patient information requested by expert clinicians who diagnose a case. Rimoldi's scoring concept built around the notion that the information requests are menu-based not free-text entry, so constructing the scoring algorithm is much simpler. If a small group of expert endodontists diagnose a patient case, numerical values can be assigned to each piece of clinical data based on how many experts requested the datum and when they requested it. A summary matrix of data requested by experts who work through a given case can be constructed. The values in each matrix cell are the number of experts who chose the datum at that step divided by the total number of choices selected. A diagnostic proficiency score is generated by adding the values of the matrix cells selected by a student who diagnoses a case. Scores can range from 0.0 to a perfect score of 1.00. [14]

Case authors provide the initial entries for the matrix and other instructor users can contribute even at a later time. Students can then receive a diagnostic proficiency score together with corrective feedback from their instructors to further improve their learning.

It is now proper to examine examples of Orthodontic simulation environments in use today. DentSim is the first system this paper will examine. Research began on the use of the DentSim simulator at the University of Pennsylvania in early 1998. Basically the unit consists of a simulated patient or manikin with head and dentoform, dental hand piece and light, infrared camera, and two computers. The manikin head and hand piece contain infrared emitters that allow the infrared camera to detect their orientation in space. As a student prepares a tooth in the manikin head, the computer can formulate a virtual image of the tooth being prepared in the computer. The virtual tooth can then be compared to the ideal preparation approved by the faculty, and abundant, detailed visual feedback can be given, including a grade. The unit can evaluate the process of the preparation and not just the end product. One of the unique properties of the DentSim unit is the computer's ability to evaluate the students' work according to an ideal preparation that can be controlled by end-user faculty. Notification of critical errors is given to the student immediately, and detailed evaluation and grading are available for the student at a click of the mouse. The unit is theoretically available twenty-four hours, seven days a week and evaluates in a standardized, reliable and valid manner according to preset parameters. From my perspective, this is a true breakthrough for dental education as most schools have suffered from a lack of consistency and uniformity among preclinical evaluators.

Moving on to another system, approach is shifted to the use of simulation environments in relation to actual environments. The IGI (Image Guided Implantology) unit is in the last stage of development by DenX, Ltd. and is specifically directed toward the teaching, diagnosis, treatment planning, and placement of implants. The exciting and unique ability of this unit is that the developers have included a registration device that can be used at the time of the surgery and allows the patient and the virtual patient image to be coordinated during the actual surgery. Hence, the surgeon can take advantage of the computer images for better orientation, and the computer will warn the surgeon if he or she is veering from the treatment plan as he or she is actually in the act of the procedure. If the computer recognizes that the surgeon is making a serious deviation from the implant placement treatment plan during surgery, the computer will stop the hand piece and the surgeon will need to override the computer to continue. This greatly enhances patient safety. It is anticipated that simulators with this type of advanced technology will encourage easier, more thorough training in the area of implant placement in dental schools and in the private practice arena. The additional support of this technology during implant placement surgery is an added and exciting benefit.

Simulation of treatment plan implementation is described in the next system. The VRDTS prototype is being developed by Novint in collaboration with the Harvard School of Dental Medicine.19 This unit, still very much in the developmental stage, consists of a desktop workstation, a phantom Desktop haptics (referring to sense of touch) interface, and dental simulation software. The software includes simulated dental instruments (low speed drill, an explorer, two carvers, a carrier, and a packer), amalgam material, and juvenile molar including enamel, dentin, caries, and pulp materials. Visual aids such as zoom magnification and cross section modes are included. To use the unit, a student holds the PHANTOM interface in the air. The dental instrument, tooth, and decay are displayed as virtual simulated images on the monitor. By moving the interface device, the operator can control the selected dental instrument and prepare or restore the juvenile tooth simulated on the monitor. [15]

The above-mentioned examples are small parts of big facilities. The next item to be inspected in this paper is a full-fledged example of a simulation environment. A purpose-built medical simulation and skills centre known as "CASMS", the Centre for Anaesthesia

Skills and Medical Simulation, is located at the Clinical Training and Education Centre (CTEC), University of Western Australia. CASMS contains three complete and independent simulation suites, a skills area, a conference room and an administration area. Each suite comprises a simulation room, which can be presented and equipped as an operating theatre, emergency department resuscitation area, recovery room, endoscopy suite, medical practitioner's office, or any other area as the training need requires. An adjoining control room allows course leaders to observe participants, control events, manipulate mannequins remotely, and communicate to role-playing training staff in the simulation room via wireless headsets. An adjacent "debriefing" room is used for tutorials, discussions and formal debriefing sessions after each scenario.

Some pointers in the evaluation of CASMS were given. They suggest that for simulation centers to maintain high standards and to continue improving the quality of training available, access to a simulation centre must be increased for the wider medical and nursing community. Scenario-based training requires a dedicated area that appears no different from the clinical domain that it represents. Medical and audiovisual equipment demands are such that it makes sense to build a dedicated clinical area that is flexible enough to be modified according to the setting, and is well-equipped for inconspicuous videotaping of clinical events. At least one separate area for small-group teaching and post-event discussion is also required. Debriefing sessions are essential in scenario-based training, and are regarded as the most difficult role for instructors. Training in debriefing techniques should be acquired before undertaking scenario-based training.

CASMS allowed experts to conclude that medical simulation centers have a significant contribution to make at all levels of training for healthcare professionals. Despite large start-up and maintenance costs, the increasing need for such collaborative skills centers will ensure their continued success in the healthcare system. [16]

Dyson and Campello propose the measures for evaluation of simulation environments in a journal article. They say that in general, what is measured determines the type of data that needs to be collected, the stage of activity to focus on, and who provides the data. The measures are chosen to answer the research question or provide the appropriate feedback in an evaluation. Issues of usability can be addressed by looking at responses to the system and eliciting perceptions. Learning is generally assessed through outcomes, but perceptions may again be informative. There may also be interactions between the usability of the system and the nature and extent of learning. Therefore comparing participation in discussions may contribute to assessing the role of the interface in the facilitation of learning.

The first measure according to them is usability heuristics. In heuristic evaluations, a small number of usability experts evaluate the interface against a set of heuristics. The next measure is frequency of interactions. Interactions with the software are important to understanding the learning process. Logs of usage might include the use of resources and participation in discussion. Quality of interactions is the third measure. If tools are employed and specific tasks carried out, it may be relevant to look at how these are used. The fourth measure includes learner perceptions. A range of variables can be measured by asking learners for their perceptions. Attitudes are sometimes separated out from perceptions, but essentially both are measured by asking for an opinion or judgment. It is the focus of the question that differs. This may be satisfaction, estimates of how much they have learned usefulness of tools in the VLE, etc. The final measure is the learning outcomes. These are an essential measure of a VLE that supports learning, but there can be difficulties in interpreting the results. It may not be possible to attribute changes in outcomes to specific elements of a learning technology. Nevertheless, studies may provide indicators of variables which may be important and these can provide the basis for future experiments. [17]

Usability, frequency and quality of interactions, learner perception, learning outcomes are supposed to be the concerns in mind upon the development of simulation environments. It is expected that in evaluation, any system will live up to the standards of such a virtual learning environment.

THEORETICAL FRAMEWORK

A. Orthodontics

Orthodontics comes from the root words "ortho" meaning straight or correct and "dontia" meaning of or related to the teeth. Orthodontics is a specialty within dentistry that combines various aspects of science—biologic science, computer science, mechanical science, and material science—into "an art form."[18]

Radiographs are important to treatment planning a patient because they allow us to see the bones and teeth which are covered by the skin and gums. With this information, one can determine the extent to which a patient's malocclusion is the result of bony defects versus dental defects.

Material science is used in orthodontics in the area of study models. Models allow us to create a duplicate of the patient's mouth and hold it in our hands for evaluation. With hand held models, it is possible to see the dentition for every conceivable angle—many of which cannot be seen directly in the patient's mouth.

Computer science makes its way into orthodontics by way allowing us to take a recent picture of the patient and make predictions about how the patient will look a the completing of treatment. These changes can be made to not just only the teeth but also to any feature you may want to change.

Many steps are involved in the orthodontic treatment of a patient, and a variety of treatment options are available that would produce a desirable outcome. For the sake of the discussion that follows, remember that the procedures have been greatly simplified and the course of treatment is only one of many legitimate options for the patient.

Orthodontic treatment can be broken down into six (6) phases. During each phase of treatment, a different wire is necessary to accomplish the goal. For a particular phase each specification of a wire is dependent on the previous wire used. Generally speaking, as you progress through the six phases of orthodontic treatment, strength and stiffness increase as range decreases. The reason the elastic properties change in this manner is because the progression facilitates the attainment of the goals of each phase of treatment. The six (6) phases of orthodontic treatment are as follows: Alignment is a process that organizes all of the teeth into a smooth curve when looking down on the biting surfaces of the teeth. The second phase of orthodontic treatment is leveling. Leveling is a method used to align the upper teeth properly with the lower teeth. The third phase in orthodontic treatment is correction of molar position. The title of this step is a good description of the process aligning the molars in an appropriate configuration. The fourth phase in orthodontic treatment is space closure. Finishing is the fifth phase in orthodontic treatment. The goal of finishing is to produce teeth that are aligned in the most ideal configuration. The final phase of orthodontic treatment is retention. Retention is a special phase of orthodontic treatment because the goal of retention is to prevent movement not create movement. [18]

B. Health Informatics

Health Informatics is the discipline concerned with the systematic processing of data in the health care environment with an emphasis on computer processing. A more elaborate definition states that Health Informatics is concerned with the study of the principles of information processing and with the provision of general solutions for information processing problems in the field of health care. It uses appropriate, formal methods and tools, especially from informatics, to model structure and mechanism information processing systems in the field of health care in order to describe or analyze these systems or in order to provide possibilities for their construction or for their evaluation.

In the University of Alabama, the Health Informatics Curriculum consists of course work that integrates the development of knowledge and understanding of the health care environment with knowledge and skills in management of health care information resources.

The graduate program in Health Informatics of the University of Minnesota trains students in the application of computer and information sciences to the quantitative aspects and decision needs of the health and life sciences. Their Health Informatics curriculum encompasses not only mathematics, statistics and computing, but also includes other engineering, management, and information sciences applied to problems arising in biology, medicine and the delivery of health care.

The Health Informatics program of the University of Missouri, Columbia is designed to produce managers and administrators who can help organizations use information to improve the delivery of health care. Course work combines classes in computer science, health informatics and health management. As a result, students develop technical and management skills that will allow them to serve as an operational link between technology experts and clinicians.

Their core curriculum includes courses in health information and health-care systems; information storage, retrieval and management; and research methods and outcomes analysis. Students also complete an informatics internship that combines an intensive three-month field experience with the development of an applied research project.

The British Medical Informatics Society asserts that Health informatics is now tending to replace the previously commoner term medical informatics, reflecting a widespread concern to define an information agenda for health services which recognizes the role of citizens as agents in their own care, as well as the major information-handling roles of the non-medical healthcare professions. [19]

C. Dental Informatics

Dental Informatics refers to the information sciences and related new technologies that may be applied to all aspects of Dentistry. It includes computer use for practice and clinical management programs. As a result, diagnostic tools become more available for dental caries and calculus detection and viewing into the gingival pocket area, among others. Dental Informatics applies to technologies in communication such as electronic mail, the Internet, literature search, and telerobotics. Teledentistry is another technology that enables specialists to review their patient's medical/dental history, clinical evaluations and then provide them with a reliable opinion on the diagnosis and the best course of management and treatment.

Dental Informatics even encompasses ancillary clinical decision making programs that provide access to data-bases such as drug dosages, uses and interactions. The term also applies to all aspects of dental education as in the use of simulation programs. Furthermore, it applies to all aspects of dental research

In the implementation of technology into dental practice, one major area of concern is managing the patient's electronic record. This involves setting up office with program, computers, printers, and the like; practicing management by using business office software and maintaining patient records, insurance claims, tracking payments, marketing, appointments, and the rest; and also recording and management of clinical data like patient history, medical alerts, charting periodontal disease and caries, treatment planning, monitor treatment progress.

Another major area of concern is imaging technology. This includes the intraoral digital and wand cameras, digital x-rays and the use of pre and post-treatment simulation as in cosmetic dentistry imaging.

New technological areas are also major concerns of Dental Informatics. This includes use of Hand-held devices such as PDA's, tablet PC, diagnostic tools and virtual reality, haptics-based simulators. [20]

D. Computer simulation

Computer simulation is a form of learning with computers in which the user may experiment with a simulated situation. This situation strongly resembles reality or is a deliberate simplification. Computer simulation enables students to make decisions without running great risks. As a result of the decisions made the computer reacts with informative feedback. This feedback is almost always of a visual nature. Visual feedback is an important characteristic of computer simulation. Therefore a computer simulation program often has the characteristics of an animation program. Computer simulation programs are multi-media programs. Computer simulation in the instructional situation offers the teacher the possibility to provide experimentation with the subject matter in an ordered way. Moreover it can make it easier to realize goals set beforehand.

It must be stressed that in the field of computer-assisted learning a distinction has to be made between simulation and modeling. Hinton for instance, says this: 'In the area of computer-assisted learning it is useful to make an operational distinction between simulation and modeling. It will be assumed that a simulation allows the student to control input parameters and to observe the output. The model, usually in the form of a mathematical relationship, is set up within the computer program and the student can simulate the phenomena or process by controlling the input and observing the output. In modeling the student is able to control or change the model upon which the simulation is based.'

As an illustration shown in Figure 1, the student is learning something about relations between interventions and variables with a simulation program based on a fixed model.

With that, an operational definition can be that computer simulation is a simulation environment on a computer screen. Most of the times, it is based on a mathematical model. Sometimes, it is also combined with a knowledge or rule-based system. [21]

PHP is a server-side scripting language for creating dynamic Web pages. Developers create pages with PHP and HTML. When a visitor opens the page, the server processes the PHP commands and then sends the results to the visitor's browser, just as with ASP or ColdFusion. Unlike ASP or ColdFusion, however, PHP is Open Source and cross-platform. PHP runs on Windows NT and many Unix versions, and it can be built as an Apache module and as a binary that can run as a CGI. When built as an Apache module, PHP is especially lightweight and speedy. Without any process creation overhead, it can return results quickly, but it doesn't require the tuning of mod_perl to keep the server's memory image small.

In addition to manipulating the content of pages, PHP can also send HTTP headers. Developers can set cookies, manage authentication, and redirect users. It offers excellent connectivity to many databases (and ODBC), and integration with various external libraries that let them do everything from generating PDF documents to parsing XML.

PHP goes right into Web pages, so there's no need for a special development environment or IDE. PHP's language syntax is similar to C's and Perl's. It is not necessary to declare variables before you use them, and it's easy to create arrays and hashes (associative arrays). PHP even has some rudimentary object-oriented features, providing a helpful way to organize and encapsulate the code. [22]

DESIGN AND IMPLEMENTATION

A. Context Diagram

Orthodontics Web-based Interactive Simulation Environment (Ortho-WISE) features three data stores and three users interacting within the system. The data stores are: simulated patients which hold the records of virtual patients used in the simulation environment; logs which hold the records of student activities; and forums which hold the conversation threads. The users involved are: the system administrator managing user accounts, the instructor handling the simulated environment, and the student contributing logs to the simulated environment. The context diagram is shown in Figure 2.

B. Entity-Relationship Diagram

The six entities of Ortho-WISE are the: Users, Patient Information, Patient Interview, Log, Feedback, and Forum. The user types are disjoint with total specialization. The different users are the system administrator, the instructor, and the student. The Users' relationships with other entities are shown in Figure 3.

The system administrator, with user type "A", updates other user accounts and moderates the forums. The instructor, with user type "I", updates the patient general information, patient interview, and feedback; views the student logs; and participates in the forums. The student, with user type "S", contributes to the log entity; views the patient general information and feedback; performs patient interview; and participates in forums.

C. Data Flow Diagrams

The top level data flow diagram of Ortho-wise illustrates the five level zero processes namely Login, Update User Accounts, Author a Case, Accept a Case, and Participate in Forums. The Login takes in user accounts as input and outputs valid users to be passed to the ther top level processes. The Update User Account adds valid users to the system. The Author a Case process, on the other hand supplies information to the Simulated Patients data store and gets data from the Log data store. The Accept a Case process gets information from the Simulated Patients data store and supplies data to the Logs data store. The data flow between the three top level processes is shown in Figure 4.

Figure 5 shows the two sub processes of process 1.0. These are the Verify User process, which takes in user information passed in the login page and outputs the valid users that are entitled to access Ortho-WISE, and the Change Password process, which takes in new user info and outputs updated user accounts.

Ortho-WISE process 2.0 has two sub processes namely Register New User Account and Activate/Deactivate User Account as shown in Figure 6. New user accounts that need to be allowed access to the system are handled by the Register New User Account System process. The newly registered account is then added to the rows of the Users entity. Users of Ortho-WISE cannot be deleted. But users can be activated or deactivated accordingly. Only activated users are granted access to the system. The changing of user status is done inside the Activate / Deactivate User Account process.

The Update Patient General Info, Update Patient Images, Generate 3D Dental Cast, Recommend and Give Feedback, and Update Supplementary Materials processes make up the Ortho-WISE super process 3.0. Only valid users can perform these processes. The Recommend and Give Feedback takes in input from the Log data store and all six processes store rows in the Simulated Patients data store. (See Figure 7.)

Patient general information is managed by the sub processes of Ortho-WISE process 3.1. Displayed in Figure 8 is the sub explosion of the said process. Valid users can add new rows to the Simulated Patients data store through the Add Patient's General Info process. They can also update existing records and store the changes to the same data store through the Edit Patient's General Info and Delete Patient's General Info processes.

Managing the patient interview involves two processes. Figure 9 shows the Add Questions and Answers, Edit Questions and Answers. All outputs from the two processes are stores in the Simulated Patients data store.

In the same token, editing of patient images is composed of four subcomponents. These are the Edit Extra-oral Images, Edit Intra-oral Images, Edit Radiographic Images, and Edit Dental Cast Images. The results are stored in the Simulated Patients data store illustrated as in Figure 12.

If valid instructor users opt to delete patient images, they can do so by performing one of the four sub processes Delete Extra-oral Images, Delete Intra-oral Images, Delete Radiographic Images, and Delete Dental Cast Images. Updates rows are stored in Simulated Patients data store as illustrated by Figure 13.

The data store Simulated Patients get recommendation and feedback data from the Recommend a Diagnosis, Recommend a Treatment Plan, and Give Feedback on Student Activity processes as shown in Figure 14. The entity Logs provide additional information for the Give Feedback on Student Activity process.

To aid instructors in giving appropriate corrective feedback to students, the View Student Log and Add Feedback sub processes involve getting student activity track from the Logs data store and storing the feedback into the Simulated Patients data store. Figure 15 illustrates this.

Process 3.6 is further sub exploded into processes Add Supplementary Materials, Edit Supplementary Materials, and Delete Supplementary Materials. All of them update rows in the Simulated Patients data store as shown in Figure 16.

Select Questions and View the Answers are sub processes that allow a student to do patient interview. They get data from the Simulated Patients data store as illustrated in Figure 18.

Displayed in Figure 20 are two processes that allow valid students to log their simulation activities in the Logs data store. These two processes are Log a Diagnosis and Log a treatment plan.

Viewing activity results is composed of five processes illustrated in Figure 21. Diagnosis, treatment plan, feedback, score, and supplementary materials are the data they require. All get information from the Simulated Patients data store.

Forum participation is handled in the sub processes of Ortho-WISE process 5.0. The four processes shown in Figure 22 are responsible for updating user rank and thread status through the Moderate Forums process and for adding threads and updating posts through the Add Threads and Posts, Edit Posts, and Delete Posts processes.

The sub processes that allow system administrators to moderate the forum are shown on Figure 23. The Edit Thread Status, Delete Threads, and Edit User Rank processes are the distinct components of process 5.1.

D. Relational Model

The attributes of the entities of Ortho-WISE is given in Figure 24. The Users entity has username as its primary key. Other attributes include password, user_type, user_status, and user_rank. The Patient Information entity has the primary key of patient_num. patient_name, extra_im, intra_im, radio_im, dental cast, diagnosis, t_plan, and sup_mat are its other attributes. Patient Interview is a weak entity that makes patient_num its primary foreign key. chief_comp, question, and answer are other attributes of this entity. log_num is the primary key of the Log entity. Other attributes include date, time, stud_diagnosis, and stud_t_plan. Feedback is also another weak entity that makes patient_num as primary foreign key. Two other attributes of this entity are diagnosis_fb and t_plan_fb. Forum entity takes thread_num as primary key. Its four other attributes are thread_title, subject, post, and thread_status. For the tracking of the author of the post, username is taken as foreign key.

Ortho-WISE is architecturally simple since it is Web-based. It may be accessed using Local Area Network plus Internet inside the university or using a direct Internet connection anywhere else. It requires a modem, router, server and switch on top of personal computers to have access to the system. It runs on any operating system and follows the same processor speed and memory requirements as the latter.

RESULTS

The main page of Ortho-WISE is shown in Figure 26. A user must input his username and password in order to gain access to the functionalities of the system. Once the user is authenticated by the system, he will be redirected to the student waiting room, the author waiting room, or the administrator home page according to his user type.

Student users of Ortho-WISE are able to select a patient case to be examined via the waiting room. Figure 27 below depicts the typical student waiting room page. It contains hyperlink facial images of all the patient cases available in the system. The student can click on any of the images available to be able to examine the corresponding patient. Through the footer, the student may also opt to proceed to the forum, change his password or logout. These last three links are available all through out the student pages.

The first step in examining the patient case is by viewing the introduction. In the introduction page, the student can view the facial picture and the chief complaint of the patient he chose. The student can also read a brief introduction to the patient for familiarization with the background of the case. If and when the student wants to change the patient he is currently examining, he may do so by clicking on the Waiting Room link located at the footer. Figure 28 shows the standard view for the case introduction page.

The second phase of patient checkup involves interview taking. Upon finishing with the case introduction, the student is directed to the list of thirty-one (31) pre-formed questions that he can choose from so he can interview the patient. The student will be able to view the answer to his chosen question by clicking on it. Figure 29 illustrates how the student can see the question and answer dialogue with the patient. After viewing a certain question and answer pair, the student can opt to go back to the complete list of questions, move on and ask the next question in the sequence, or he can proceed with the dental examination phase.

author. Furthermore, an option is given on the same page to view the 3D model of the dental cast. Figure 30 shows an example of a 3D model of the dental cast images of a patient case. This model will allow the student to simulate his examination of the dental cast and view in their respective positions the front, left, right, maxillary and mandibular dental cast images of the patient. Since these images make up only 5 sides of the cube, the facial image of the patient is shown on the sixth side. After viewing the 3D model, the student may opt to go back to the dental examination page or proceed to the laboratory tests page.

The laboratory tests page simulate the gathering of extra-oral, intra-oral, and radiographic data from the patient. The data are presented as a sequence of hyperlink images with respective captions that can be clicked to enlarge on another window. The first page that displays laboratory test results is the extra-oral page which contains information about the physical health and appearance of the patient. The second page shows results from the intra-oral laboratory test. It contains facts about the state of the teeth, gums, tongue and everything else inside the mouth of the patient. The last page of the laboratory tests page, illustrated in Figure 31, presents x-ray results in images as well as details regarding bone and teeth fractures and abnormalities.

Laboratory testing marks the final stage of patient checkup. The student is thereby expected to make his diagnosis and present his diagnosis based on all the information about the patient that he has gathered. The student's diagnosis is asked first and then the treatment plan comes next. Figure 32 shows the treatment planning form which closely resembles the diagnosis making page.

Only after the student has finished presenting his diagnosis and treatment plan will the feedback section be available for his viewing. The feedback section contains four parts. The first of which is the diagnosis feedback as shown in Figure 33. The student can compare his own diagnosis with that of the case author in the recommended diagnosis page. The same is true for the treatment plan feedback part. The page contains the case author's treatment plan for the case as well as his submitted therapy proposal. Therefore, the student can also compare his own treatment plan to that of the case author's.

The third phase of student feedback is accessing the supplementary and reference materials related to the patient case. Figure 34 illustrates how the students can retrieve all the files recommended by the case author to be studied along with the case. For each of the files, there is a separate download button and a short description for the material.

The last phase of student feedback is given by viewing the corrective feedback. This is the case author's opinion on what the students have logged as their diagnoses and treatment plan. Corrective feedback is not individualized. It is for all the students, collectively. Viewing this corrective feedback is similar in format to Figure 33.

Case authors of Ortho-WISE are able to add and edit a patient case. To do both, they must first go to the waiting room. This waiting room is shown in Figure 35. There are rows of hyperlink facial images of patients. For patients already examined by students, the facial pictures are displayed together with the View Student Log button. If the author wants to edit a patient's information, he must click on the image link. If he wants to see whether any student has logged diagnosis and treatment plan for a patient, he must click on the button beside it. Furthermore, if he wants to add a new case, he has to click on the Add Patient Case button.

The case author has the capacity to manage the simulated patients he created. Figure 36 illustrates the interface for such functionality. The author can change facial image and edit the chief complaint and brief introduction text. Or, if he is adding a new case, he can upload a facial image and add the chief complaint and brief introduction text.

Adding/Editing of answers to the patient interview is shown in Figure 37. But before an author can access this page, he must first select a question from a list of pre-formed questions. After he chooses the question, he may be able to add/edit the answer that the patient is thought to answer. He can submit this answer and proceed to the next question or go back to the complete list of questions. If the author has finished answering all questions or if he feels that there is no more need to answer the rest of the questions, he can proceed to the dental examination page.

The dental cast images are limited to five images only. In contrast, laboratory test images are not bounded by any number. The case author can upload as many images as he wants for each of the extra-oral, intra-oral, and radiographic categories. In Figure 39, it is shown that the laboratory test existing images can be deleted.

The case author is also required to give a description to the images per laboratory test category so as to guide the student in studying the patient case.

Recommending the diagnosis and treatment plan follows the same format. Figure 40 illustrates the treatment planning stage of the case authoring. This is similar to what he will see in the diagnosis making stage. The updated contents of both of these text areas will be what will be viewed by the student users of Ortho-WISE.

Updating supplementary materials is similar to updating laboratory test results. The author may upload as many supplementary materials as he wants. In editing mode, he can delete existing supplementary materials and upload new ones. He is required to give a description for each supplementary material. He can also click on the filename of the material to be able to view it himself. Figure 41 illustrates this page.

All the diagnoses and treatment plans of students are logged in the database. This log can be viewed by case author of the patient case alone. Figure 42 demonstrates the typical student log. It contains the date and time that the student submitted the log and the contents of his diagnoses and treatment plan. After viewing this log, the author can now make a corrective feedback for all the students who have examined the case.

The author can only submit corrective feedback when there is at least one student that has logged diagnosis and treatment plan for the case. Otherwise, the corrective feedback will have no use. This feedback is for the collective log of the students who have examined the case. For further discussions about the feedback and the log, both the student and the professors/authors can participate in the forums. Submitting the corrective feedback is illustrated in Figure 43.

System Administrators of Ortho-WISE have the task of managing the system's users as well as moderate the forums. Managing users mean first and foremost, adding new users to the system. Figure 44 exemplifies the form that system administrators use to add new users. System administrators can add all types of users: students, authors, or even other administrators. The form requires that a password be added. This password can be changed upon login of the valid user.

Existing users of Ortho-WISE cannot be deleted because they may affect the data inside the database. However, users can be deactivated to forbid access to the system. System administrators have the task of activating or deactivating users and they do it using the form shown in Figure 45.

The System Administrator has the capacity to view all users of Ortho-WISE whether they are active or inactive. Figure 46 depicts the listing of all current users of the system. The fields are user name, user type (administrator, author, or student), and status (activated or deactivated).

All Ortho-WISE users have the capacity to change their passwords for their own safety and convenience. They can do so by using the form given in Figure 47. As a security measure, the user must input his old password then input two matching new password strings. If the old password is incorrect, the user password will remain unchanged. The user can easily go back to his home page after he changes his password.

Ortho-WISE is inclusive of a forum that allows for further discussion and correspondence between teachers and students, among teachers, and among students. The forum contains categories that lets Ortho-WISE users discuss patient cases along with the diagnoses and treatment plans involved, lets students suggest patient cases, lets authors announce changes to the patient cases, among others. The index of this forum is shown in Figure 48. Ortho-WISE Community Forum has a link back to the main page of Ortho-WISE.

DISCUSSION

Orthodontics Web-based Interactive Simulation Environment (Ortho-WISE) is an online application that allows Orthodontist professors to author cases optimized for dental education and allows students to meet these patient cases and perform clinical procedures like interview taking, diagnosis making, and treatment planning to them. Ortho-WISE is a non-proprietary, cross-platform software. It is written using PHP connected to a MySQL database and should work on different operating systems such as Windows and Linux.

With the use of this system, students will be able to practice integrating their knowledge repetitively with no risk in committing mistakes as compared with dealing with real patients. Students will also have the opportunity to encounter patients with important and typical conditions. These patients will never be lost to follow up. The system also promotes higher level aspects of the thinking process to the students as it allows them to compare their investigation and decision making skills to that of the case author, view reference and supplementary materials, and receive feedback for their diagnoses and treatment plans.

However, this simulation environment is not fully equivalent to the real case traditional teaching approach. Real patients act embarrassed or stressed and don't have predictable behavior. Handling these types of patients can not be taught by the system. The professional development of students is a process that involves even the details of interpersonal communication with the patient.

The Graduate Program in Orthodontics currently employs the traditional form of teaching. Their curriculum involves two parts. The first part intensive course that introduces dental laboratory theories and the second part involves clinical instruction that allows students to meet real patients. In this approach, the students may not be able to encounter patients that they will meet outside of the university premises. The real cases that turn out are not restricted in terms of type of condition, leaving the student unaware of decision skills needed to handle various types of patients.

Existing software for simulation are not tailored fit for Orthodontics. More often than not, they are for diagnosing medical illnesses and symptoms. Also, simulation software available today does not emphasize dialogue between the case authors and the students. Ortho-WISE focuses solely on handling Orthodontic patients, is envisioned to be part of the academic curriculum, and facilitates further discussion among professors and students through the forums.

The importance of creating an online simulation environment lies in the fact that students can now learn outside of the classroom. Without regard to time of day or physical location, students can gain important theories and skills that they need in their practice. Teachers can likewise teach and author cases even at home. Both users can benefit while working in a relaxed environment.

CONCLUSION

Orthodontics Web-based Simulation Environment is an interactive application that allows the student users to select a patient case to be used from the waiting room, view the patient's general information, view the patient's answers to questions related to dental history, perform simulation on dental examination, view extra-oral, intra-oral, and radiographic examination images, present Orthodontic diagnosis and treatment plan on the patient case, view corrective feedback, which includes recommended diagnosis and treatment plan, on a particular patient case, access supplementary materials in Orthodontics related to the patient case, and post and read threads in the forum.

It also allows the instructors to add a patient's general information, add answers to dental history and chief complaint interview per case, upload images for extra-oral, intra-oral and radiographic examinations and images for dental casts per case, transform uploaded patient case's dental cast into a 3D model, recommend Orthodontic diagnosis and treatment plan on own added case, view the log of student diagnosis and feedback, give feedback on student activity, upload supplementary materials in Orthodontics per case, and post and read threads in the forum.

Furthermore, the system administrator of Ortho-WISE has the capacity to maintain user accounts and moderate the forums.

CHAPTER 8

RECOMMENDATION

Future work can focus on evaluating the student's perception of the virtual character as a teaching tool, as well as the effect of the system on the student. This is so professors can evaluate the educational equivalency between real and virtual patients and if students who repeatedly use the system report a reduced anxiety with standardized patients.

It is also recommended to use digital modeling for the 3D transformation of the dental cast if and when the Graduate Program in Orthodontics acquires a digital camera and a turntable. Both are needed to record several (50-100) digital images of the cast from different viewpoints and render a more accurate 3D representation.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

Six weeks ago, I was strongly convinced that I wouldn't be able to finish my Special Problem and that I wouldn't graduate on time. I wouldn't have guessed I would come to this —writing the final chapter before I have this document in hard bound.

Of course, I was not without help. With this, I would like to express my gratitude, to all of those who have made it easier for me to accomplish this much.

To my Heavenly Father, Creator, God of the heavens and the earth, Almighty King, thank you for the daily strength, for the wisdom and knowledge, the patience, the lessons learned, the pains, aches, and hurts, the joys, smiles, and laughter, the wonderful ways in which you showed me that you loved me and that with you, really, nothing is impossible.

To my parents and sister, thank you for being supportive of me from my elementary days till now, for the pressure to be excellent in whatever I do, for believing in what I can do, for loving me and providing for my needs.

To the Kempis clan, thank you for the wisdom you passed on to me. Thank you for always being there when I need anything.

To the Craw clan, thank you for all the fun moments I shared with all of you. They made me forget the academic pressures I have, even for a short while.

To the SVCF family, I thank you for all the prayers, for the pressure to please our God wherever, whenever, and in whatever I do. Thank you for trusting in me, and giving me responsibilities that enabled me to serve God inside the UP Manila campus.

To the Pildira family, thank you for praying for me and with me. Being part of the Pildira family is a great blessing from God.

To my adviser, Dr. Vincent Peter Magboo, thank you for all the good suggestions you have given me. It sure helped a lot. Thanks also for helping me answer the panel's questions especially when all I could mutter is a smile.

To the Computer Science people, especially those whose student numbers start with 2003...☺, thank you being part of my life. With all the hardships we went through together, I am sure not to forget anyone of you. Thanks for all the memories of notes shared, the group assignments we passed, the exams we flunked and passed, the projects that kept us all awake, the Rob moments, the canteen review sessions, and most especially, the ramp tambayan ecklavus. Thanks for the friendship I had with all of you.

And most importantly, I would like to express my gratitude to my angel. My fortress, my strength, my best friend, the only one I trust, the one I love. Thank you for lending me your time, treasures, and talents. Thank you for being with me through thick and thin, for forgetting about your own responsibilities to be with me and help me fulfill mine, for being patient with me especially when I'm already frustrated with all that I have to do and I'm in a bad mood, for taking care of me, for bringing me food even if I didn't ask just because you knew I was hungry, for creating my site template and for teaching me how to use it, for the encouraging words that give me motivation in times when I was ready to give up hope, for the much needed hugs, for staying up late with me, for treating me out because you knew I was already intoxicated, for making me feel so loved, so important, so good, and for simply making me feel. I am a better person because of you. Thank you for being the most important person in my life.
